

INTRO

First of all, gracias for bringing this project our way! As a soccer fan, I can totally relate to the personal connection we feel with the beautiful game.

I've been in a World Cup, I shot with a lot of soccer stars. I'm from Uruguay, a country with football fields everywhere. If I don't want to loose my citizenship, I have to feel the sport.

I've even shed a tear or two (or three or four) for my team and I'm pretty sure I've used a t-shirt to cover my face during a match at least once. It's all part of the fanxiety.

And as Latinos, we definitely have our own special way of feeling the sport. We wear our hearts on our sleeves and let our emotions run wild. It's like a catharsis, and I absolutely love the comedy that emerges from all that drama. Because let's face it, soccer can be pretty darn dramatic sometimes.
